

Contents

Contributors ix

Introduction xi

Michael Siegal and Luca Surian

Acknowledgements xx

List of abbreviations xxi

Part 1 Theory of mind

- 1 How conversational input shapes theory of mind development in infancy and early childhood 3
Virginia Slaughter and Candida C. Peterson
- 2 Social relationships and children's understanding of mind: Attachment, internal states, and mind-mindedness 23
Elizabeth Meins
- 3 How access to language affects theory of mind in deaf children 44
Marek Meristo, Erland Hjelmquist, and Gary Morgan
- 4 Theory of mind in children with cerebral palsy: The impact of limited expressive linguistic abilities 62
Annika Dahlgren Sandberg and SvenOlof Dahlgren

Part 2 Acquisition of pragmatics

- 5 Children's responses to yes-no questions 83
V. Heather Fritzley, Mako Okanda, Shoji Itakura, and Kang Lee
- 6 Getting information from other people: Who do children turn to? 100
Michelle M. Chouinard and Kristi Imberi-Olivares
- 7 The scope and origins of children's assumptions of conventionality 116
Gil Diesendruck
- 8 Access to language, social cognition, and lexical development in autism 135
Luca Surian

Part 3 Multiple access to language

- 9 Counting words and a principles-after account of the development of number concepts 161
Brian Butterworth and Robert Reeve
- 10 Access to childhood language memory: Implications for cognitive development 176
Terry Kit-fong Au
- 11 Early bilingualism and theory of mind: Bilinguals' advantage in dealing with conflicting mental representations 192
Ágnes Melinda Kovács
- 12 Exploring the effects of bilingualism on children's conversational understanding and moral sense 219
Michael Siegal, Maria A. Tallandini, Sandra Pellizzoni, and Corinna Michelin
- Name Index 241
- Subject Index 247